- 3. Army training given to dogs was broken down into two cycles, each lasting one year, as follows:
 - (a) The first cycle, a basic course in which dogs were taught simple commands and obedience, normally started when the dogs were six months old. This training progressed through various stages to the point where a dog had learned such feats as jumping a two m picket fence or climbing a ladder on command. During this cycle dogs were also trained to protect their masters and to guard property.
 - (b) The second cycle consisted in specialized training for medical, guard, messenger, and anti-tank duties.
